Welcome

Hymn

*All things bright and beautiful,
All creatures great and small,
All things wise and wonderful,
The Lord God made them all.*

Each little flower that opens,
Each little bird that sings,
He made their glowing colours,
He made their tiny wings.

The purple-headed mountain,
The river running by,
The sunset and the morning,
That brightens up the sky.

The cold wind in the winter,
The pleasant summer sun,
The ripe fruits in the garden,
He made them every one.

The tall trees in the greenwood,
The meadows for our play,
The rushes by the water
To gather every day.

He gave us eyes to see them,
And lips that we might tell,
How great is God Almighty,
Who has made all things well.

Notes from the afternoon Terry and I spent talking with Les King September 2009. Sadly, Les never felt able to do the filmed interview that Jo Lewington and I hoped to do, but I did make notes as soon as I got home. He never got over losing Stella; he had to fight back the tears when talking about her and he was too afraid of breaking down while being filmed.

Les and Stella came from Coventry to live in Bampton in 1960 to be close to Stella's parents, Dolly & Eric Stroud who also lived here in Bampton. They bought a shop, now a private house on the corner of Bushey Row and High Street opposite the Physiotherapy shop. The private dwellings are Strawberry Cottage and Lesta House.

They'd never owned or run a shop before so came as raw recruits to the job and had to learn on the hoof. Faye Ham was a member of their staff and years later when Faye started her own shop in Bampton Les and Stella helped her choose things to sell in her shop they knew Bampton people would want.

The solicitor Les and Stella used, to sell their house in Coventry, also saw to the purchase of their shop here in Bampton. Unfortunately the solicitor was rather fond of a drink and when Les and Stella turned up here to move into their new shop, they found the contract the outgoing shop owner had was dated one month later than their own for moving in.

So, Stella and the budgie moved in with her parents, Dolly and Eric Stroud, for one month and Les had to stay elsewhere, because there just wasn't space for him as well.

When they eventually moved in, they found the contents of the upstairs were very much a store of everything that hadn't sold over decades as well as stock that did. It was an hilarious Aladdin's cave which gave them many laughs and it also took them a long time and a lot of hard work to get it all cleared out and the upstairs made into a home.

The garden was like a jungle but particularly thick with face-high nettles and at the far end was a very friendly two-holer, which at that time was the staff toilet.

The items on sales gradually settled to those of a drapers plus ladies and gents clothing and some footwear and they made a great success of that. They also tried offering made to measure suits which were beautifully made. Fittings were done after the shop closed. Amazingly, these suits were ordered and bought by people from all strata of Bampton, from gentry to the ordinary working man. Hoppy Smith who lived in the caravan on the left as you go out of Bampton had one suit made.

When he went to London he went to a Jewish tailor and asked if he could make him a made-to-measure suit with the same quality material and if so, how much it would cost. The answer was, yes, he could, and the price quoted was three times more than he'd paid in Bampton so Hoppy immediately ordered another one from Les & Stella.

Les and Stella worked none-stop for their first 5 years in the shop, never once having a holiday and Les in particular became very run down. Dr. Bullen realised he wasn't going to be able to persuade them to go away on holiday so prescribed Guinness and oysters.

They were good friends with Paul Bovington who owned and ran the wet fish shop across the road and when Les told Paul what the Dr. said, Paul said if he, Les, supplied the Guinness he'd supply the oysters, and so for weeks they met two or three times a week to down oysters and Guinness. Les loathed the oysters then and always did, but he dutifully consumed them along with the Guinness as prescribed and eventually felt much better.

Stella was a beautiful dancer and if Les had not been able to dance well enough, their courtship would probably never have taken off. One of the SPAJER'S fund raising events was an annual ball at Weald Manor, by kind invitation of Col and Mrs Colvile and later by his son Major

Robert and Mrs Colvile. It was a joy to see Les and Stella dance there where they also helped with the whole function.

About 10 years after they bought their shop on High Street, they sold up and it became a private dwelling, now called Strawberry Cottage. The shop opposite was a wonderful hardware store owned and run by Stella's parents. Les and Stella went to live in Kenilworth for a couple of years, where they bought a dilapidated house, turned it into a wonderful home, sold it and came to Bampton where they bought the Wheat Sheaf pub in Bridge Street, almost opposite Papworth's newsagents shop and turned it into the Post Office. Mrs Reynolds had run the post office in Bampton for decades at Wheelgate House, but she didn't want to move out of the house when she retired hence the need for new premises to be found for the post office.

Les and Stella then turned their barn, which sits diagonally on the corner of Bridge Street and Church View, into a delightful home and gave it to Dolly and Eric to retire into from their hardware store which they sold to Frank and Evelyn Godwin. When Les and Stella finally retired from the post office they converted the barn that stood right behind it into a home, doing much of the work themselves, and with a big smile, called it 'King's Court.' From there they moved to Minster Lovell but only for a short time and Bampton called them back yet again and they bought a house in The Pieces which was to be their final home.
