My Mum says she was also a regular visitor to the pub while they lived in Oxford. It seems their busiest time was the St Gile's Fair in early September every year. Mum also recalls that Rhoda was quite badly scarred as a result of Florence inadvertently placing her in a bathtub of boiling water when she was a baby spoke to dad he said as far as he knows his father and the rest of the morton family moved to bampton about 1902.

Hi jonathan,

William would have been around 2 years old as he was born at Sutton the next village to where I live now. the house he was born in is still standing. I don't know if dad told you when he wanted to join the navy his father said no so William said if he did not sign the form he would drown himself.

HMS Hampshire, Lord Kitchener and the deaths of 650 men DIANE MACLEAN

5 June 1916

IN JUNE 1916, Field Marshall Earl Kitchener, the Minister of War, was scheduled to visit Russia for a series of negotiations aimed at ensuring that the Tsar's forces would stay in the war.

Kitchener landed in Orkney where he briefly met Admiral Jellicoe before he joined the cruiser HMS Hampshire and prepared to set sail through Scapa Flow.

HMS Hampshire, with her crew of 643 men as well as Kitchener and his staff, pulled up anchors at 4:40pm on Monday 5 June, 1916. With her were the destroyers HMS Unity and Victor. As they left Scapa Flow they sailed into stormy weather. The two destroyers struggled with the force nine gale and by 6:30pm they had both been signalled to return to base. The Hampshire fought on alone.

Unbeknown to the master and her crew, Scapa Flow had been visited by a German U-boat at the end of May. Undetected, U-75 laid 22 mines off the coast of Orkney. Bad weather at the beginning of June prevented the routine sweep of the area, so all the mines were out there as the Hampshire sailed on.

Struggling against the wind HMS Hampshire could only maintain 13.5 knots and was roughly one and a half miles from shore. At 7:45pm an urgent telegraph message was sent from nearby Birsay Post Office to Kirkwall and Stromness. It read: "Battle cruiser seems in distress between Marwick Head and the brough of Birsay."

A mile and a half out at sea the Hampshire was indeed in difficulties. An explosion had shaken the whole ship, the power had failed and she was unable to radio for assistance. She began to sink.

Birsay Post Office transmitted a second message signalling that there was a "vessel down".

The RNLI rushed to Stromness Naval HQ with the offer to launch a lifeboat. To their surprise their help was strenuously rejected. Further up the coast armed soldiers stood guard over the coast preventing locals from reaching the stricken ship.

Of the 667 crewmen who had left Orkney only 12 survived the sinking

The Hampshire had been down for four hours by the time her lifeboats started to reach the shore. The first raft, which had 40 men in it when it left the sinking ship, picked up a further 30 from the water. By the time it reached land only six were left alive. A second craft made it to the shore. Of the 40 or 50 men on board only four had survived the journey. Those who made it were unable to haul themselves up the rocks, and most died on the shoreline. Of the 667 people who had left Orkney only 12 survived the sinking. Kitchener was not among them. He died along with his staff.

The action of the authorities on the night inevitably led to intense speculation about the sinking. Questions were asked about why the Hampshire left Orkney in such a hurry, with such bad weather conditions forecast. What of the armed men stationed round the cliffs to ward off curious locals? If people were actively discouraged from helping rescue the stricken craft, there must have been a reason. Theories circulated that Kitchener had been deliberately killed or that he had not even been on the boat and that a body-double was lying dead in the sea in his place.

To this day, nobody is sure what happened on the night the Hampshire sank. What is likely is that in the confusion of the Battle of Jutland, naval staff had failed to note that U-75 had penetrated the Orkneys. On the night itself general confusion meant officials were unsure what boat had sank, initially unsure if the boat was German or a British warship.

After the war a large monument was raised in Kitchener's memory on Marwick Head, overlooking the massive cliffs where so many lives were lost. His body was never recovered and must still lie at the bottom of the sea at Scapa Flow

I've been through the photo of Cecil & Clara's wedding with my Mum and this is who she thinks the people are:

On the far left of the back row is Clara's brother John (Jack) Morton and he is holding his daughter Minnie, who was almost 2 years old. Standing in front of Jack is his eldest daughter Florence, who would have been 8 at the time.

Mum thinks that Jack's wife Elizabeth (who she knew as Aunt Bess) stayed at home because she felt unwell and their other daughter Winifred, who was 7, stayed with her.

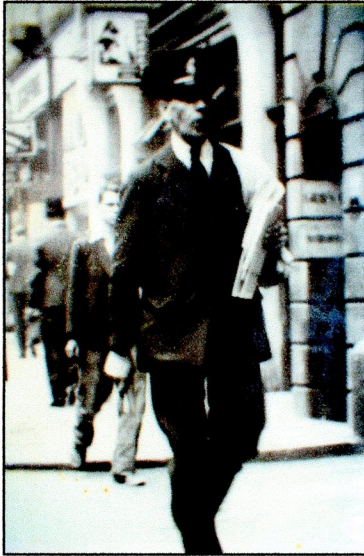

The young woman standing to the right of Jack was a friend of Clara's (we don't know her name).

The soldier in the back row was Cecil's best man (we don't know his name) and the woman to the right him is his wife. And it is their two children who are standing in front of them.

Taken from notes on William Albert Morton by M7w ALLEN CHAPMAN

William's sister Clara married Cecil Scott, a serving soldier in the Oxfordshire & Buckinghamshire Light Infantry, at Bampton Parish Church on Christmas Eve 1921. Cecil was originally from London. They had two children; Violet, born in 1923, and Roy, born in 1930. Cecil left the Army in 1924 and worked as a postman in Oxford. They lived at various addresses in and around Oxford until moving to Wood Green, in north London, in 1936. Cecil continued to work for the GPO, based at Holborn in central London, until he retired in 1960. Clara died in 1967, aged 65, and Cecil died the following year at the age of 68.

Taken from an Email sent by M7w ALLEN CHAPMAN 15/01/2006

I do indeed know who the two men with Bob Wells are. The one in the middle is my Grandad, Cecil Scott. He was both a Special Constable and an Air Raid Warden during the Second World War.

The man on the right is Cecil's younger brother, Leonard Scott.

"Uncle Len" and his wife, Gwen (who came from Abingdon), followed Cecil & Clara down from Oxford to London and lived near us in Wood Green when I was growing up. Len died in November 1983 and Gwen in October 1999, when she was over 90 years old. They had two children; Trevor and Eileen. Trevor is now 70 and lives with his second wife, Maisie, in Islington, North London. Eileen, who was a nurse, sadly died very young, in March 1984. She was only in her forties.

Both Trevor and Eileen had children themselves. Trevor had a son, Geoffrey, from his first marriage. Eileen (married name Patient) had a son, Tim, and a daughter, Julie.
